

QVC Sues Shopping App for Web Scraping That Allegedly Triggered Site Outage

New Media & Technology Law Blog on December 5, 2014

Operators of public-facing websites are typically concerned about the unauthorized, technology-based extraction of large volumes of information from their sites, often by competitors or others in related businesses. The practice, usually referred to as screen scraping, web harvesting, crawling or spidering, has been the subject of many questions and a fair amount of litigation over the last decade...
