

Tripping the Light Cran-tastic: Ocean Spray Washes Away Attempted Class Certification

Proskauer on Advertising Law Blog on April 9, 2015

Class certification in false advertising cases often fails due to problems with the class itself such as ascertainability. But what happens when a class action plaintiff admits she didn't rely upon the purportedly deceptive claims in making her purchasing decision? A recent decision in California's "food court" may provide an answer... Continue Reading
