

What Threats Can Muffle a Corporate Action? FINRA May Rely on SEC Enforcement Proceedings

Corporate Defense and Disputes Blog on February 20, 2015

In a pair of recent opinions, the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) found that FINRA acted within the scope of its rules and governing statutory scheme in refusing to announce corporate actions for companies whose executives were subjects of regulatory actions alleging securities laws violations... Continue Reading