

The Supreme Court's Spokeo Decision and its Potential Impact on Privacy and Data Security Class Actions

Minding Your Business Blog on May 17, 2016

On May 16, 2016, the Supreme Court decided Spokeo, Inc. v. Robins, ruling that a plaintiff must sufficiently allege an injury that is both concrete and particularized in order to have Article III standing, and further that a “bare procedural violation” of a plaintiff’s statutory right may not be sufficiently “concrete” under this analysis. This ruling has the potential to affect class actions generally, but may prove especially influential in privacy and data security class actions... Continue Reading