

UK Employment Tribunal Rules that Individuals Working in the “Gig Economy” are Entitled to Paid Leave

International Labor Law Blog on February 16, 2017

An Employment Tribunal in the United Kingdom ruled that a bicycle courier for CitySprint, a delivery firm, was a worker rather than self-employed and therefore entitled to paid leave. This is the most recent decision in a string of UK cases dealing with the “gig economy,” namely, repeated short-term work such as ride-sharing or courier services...

Continue Reading

Related Professionals

- Yonatan Grossman-Boder
Special Labor Relations Counsel