New York Litigation: General Commercial: The Elite

Band 4

The Firm: This group has a strong presence in New York and is recommended by clients for its superb experience in complex commercial litigation across a wide range of sectors, including intellectual property, sports, antitrust and employment. Recent highlights include the team's representation of Major League Soccer in an antitrust and RICO case brought by ChampionsWorld. The group is also increasingly recognized for its white-collar capabilities.

Sources Say: "The firm has very experienced and intelligent attorneys with a broad range of commercial experience."

Key Individuals: Litigation group cochair and expert trial lawyer Robert Cleary is lauded for his "tremendous thoroughness and experience." He has a strong track record in representing individuals in white-collar litigation matters, including his role on behalf of Christopher Garand, former senior vice president at General Re, in a case appealing the conviction of five former Gen Re and AIG executives.

Bruce Fader wins praise as "an incredible strategist for general and commercial litigation," who clients "would go back to in a flash." He offers strong trial skills, and in-depth knowledge of commercial and securities litigation and international arbitration.

Bradley Ruskin is the cochair of the firm's litigation group. He focuses on complex commercial disputes, and is particularly well versed in sports-related matters. He recently represented Major League Soccer in the high-profile antitrust and RICO suit brought by ChampionsWorld.
