Cameron Cox earned a B.A. from Boston College, and a J.D. from the University of New Hampshire Franklin Pierce School of Law where he served as a Managing Editor for the University of New Hampshire Law Review.

After law school, Cameron completed three federal clerkships. First, he clerked for U.S. Magistrate Judge Douglas E. Arpert and U.S. District Judge Michael A. Shipp with the District of New Jersey. Then, Cameron clerked for U.S. Circuit Judge Tamika Montgomery-Reeves with the Third Circuit Court of Appeals. While clerking, Cameron gained experience with a broad array of dispositive motions and appeals and assisted judges with discovery-dispute resolution and trial-related decisions.
