Christina Maria Assi is an associate in the firm's Litigation Department, where she focuses on complex civil litigation, including product liability and commercial matters.

Christina has advised leading agrochemical, biopharmaceutical, and medical device manufacturers in connection with complex and multi-plaintiff product liability actions, including wrongful death and survival claims, in all phases of litigation, from discovery through trial. She has also advised domestic and international clients in a range of commercial controversies, including securities litigation and partnership disputes.

In addition to representing clients in state and federal courts across the country, Christina also advises clients in connection with requests for information and subpoenas from regulatory authorities.

Christina maintains an active pro bono practice, including advising civil liberties and anti-hate organizations. She also co-chairs the Young Lawyer's Division of the Association of Business Trial Lawyers in Los Angeles.

Christina graduated magna cum laude from Georgetown University Law Center. While at Georgetown, she served as symposium editor for the Georgetown Environmental Law Review.
