Jennifer Roche is an associate in the Litigation Department. She is a commercial litigator who focuses on complex financial services matters, antitrust disputes and securities litigation. She represents clients in a variety of industries that include private equity, banking, insurance, professional sports, health care, energy and publishing in both state and federal courts, including in bankruptcy court.

Jennifer also represents corporations in internal investigations and regulatory investigations initiated by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission and other government agencies. In addition, she advises clients in connection with potential mergers and acquisitions regarding target company litigation exposure.

Before entering the practice of law, Jennifer worked for several years as a consultant in the health care industry, advising clients in the selection and implementation of health care technology solutions.

Matters

Representative Matters

- Won dismissal of all claims on the pleadings and judgment in favor of Major League Baseball (MLB) and former Commissioner Bud Selig in antitrust litigation brought by the city of San José as a result of alleged delay in MLB's consideration of a request by the Oakland A's to relocate to San José, affirmed on appeal.
