Jessica Griffith is an associate in the Litigation Department. Her practice focuses on a wide range of complex civil and commercial litigation matters in both state and federal courts, including antitrust, intellectual property, false advertising, and unfair competition, as well as white-collar criminal defense and internal investigations. Her matters encompass a variety of industries, ranging from entertainment and sports to consumer products and agriculture.

Jessica has represented clients in all phases of litigation, including drafting dispositive motions, coordinating discovery, and preparing witnesses for deposition and trial. Most recently, Jessica was part of the trial team that secured a complete defense verdict for Sanderson Farms following a six-week federal jury trial in a blockbuster broiler chicken antitrust conspiracy case seeking $7 billion in damages.

Jessica earned her J.D. from the University of California, Los Angeles, where she was an Associate Editor of the UCLA Law Review and a Managing Editor of the Journal of Law and Technology. She also served as a legal writing advisor to first-year students and on the board of the Intellectual Property Law Association. While at UCLA, Jessica interned for an administrative judge at the United States Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.
