Rachel Gulotta is an associate in the Labor & Employment Department.

Rachel has experience practicing in federal and state courts, and before administrative agencies such as the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. As part of her employment litigation practice, Rachel has assisted in single-plaintiff lawsuits, class and collective actions, and international employment matters in a wide range of industries, including representing healthcare institutions, public transportation services, and food and beverage providers. Rachel's areas of substantive experience include state and federal wage and hour laws and Title VII. In addition, Rachel has experience counseling clients on compliance with state and federal employment laws and developing company policies.

She earned her B.A. in French and history from Davidson College and her J.D. from Tulane Law School. During law school, she was moot court chief justice, a member of the Willem C. Vis International Commercial Arbitration moot court team, and president of the Civil Law Society. Additionally, she clerked with Magistrate Judge Joseph C. Wilkinson, Jr. in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana for one year after law school.

Prior to law school, Rachel taught middle school English in Toulouse, France, and she was the features editor of the Acadiana Lifestyle magazine in New Iberia, Louisiana.
