Simona Weil is a senior counsel in the Litigation Department in the Los Angeles office. Simona's practice encompasses a broad range of complex civil and commercial litigation matters, including antitrust, copyright, trade secrets, contract, and product liability defense. She has represented clients across various industries before both state and federal courts.

Simona has experience in all phases of litigation, including drafting dispositive motions, taking depositions, and preparing witnesses for deposition and trial. Most recently, Simona was part of the trial team representing Sanderson Farms that secured a complete defense verdict following a six-week federal jury trial in a blockbuster broiler chicken antitrust conspiracy case, defeating $7 billion in damages claims.

At the University of Southern California Gould School of Law, Simona served on the Executive Board as an editor of the Hale Moot Court Honors Program. While at USC, she worked as a judicial extern for the Honorable Magistrate Judge Andrew J. Wistrich in the Central District of California.
